SECTION A

Answer Question 01.

EXTRACT A

By 1080 the whole of Asia Minor was in the hands of the Seljuk Turks except for the Black Sea coast and districts in the south west. The Sultan of Rum had established his capital at Nicaea, less than a hundred miles from Constantinople. Most of the Turks of Asia Minor recognised Malik Shah as their overlord and in 1085 the Sultan of Rum captured Antioch. Under such circumstances it was impossible for pilgrims to cross Anatolia on their way to the Holy Land. Even if they managed to reach Palestine by sea, they found things to be little better as the Turks had begun to bring Fatimid domination to an end.

EXTRACT B

Romanus Diogenes had miscalculated when he decided to fight Alp Arslan in 1071. Alp Arslan had no hostile intentions towards the Byzantine Empire and was moving with his cavalry in the Sunni interest to attack the Shiite Fatimid power in Egypt. He gave merciful terms to Romanus, but this did nothing for the defeated leader, who was overthrown. There followed a ten year civil war in Byzantium which resulted in a series of Byzantine strongholds falling into the hands of a small number of Seljuk Turks who, being nomadic horsemen, had no real capacity for siege warfare and would not normally have been able to capture these cities.
