Study these two sources which refer to the way that people in Wales and England coped with the experience of war and answer the question which follows.

Source B

People living in the East End of London are finding life hard. There is no bread, no milk, no electricity, no gas, no telephones. Their morale is low after countless nights of bombings. Everywhere there is fear.

[A report by the Bishop of Winchester after his visit to London in December 1940]

Source C

Britain coped well with the war. No one had time to worry. Rationing made people healthier and the strains of unemployment disappeared because most people were now in work. Women escaped from the home and domestic service, and there was a strong sense of community throughout the country.

[Philip Ziegler, an historian writing in his general history book, Britain 1926 to 1986, published in 1986]

- (c) Why do Sources B and C have different views about how well people in Wales and England coped with the experience of war? [8]

In your answer you should refer to the content and authorship of the sources and use your own knowledge.
